2) Have there been significant differences in support for positions? If the survey shows no change, this is almost the opposite of what we would expect if the students had adopted the correct view. The fact that there have been differences suggests that at least some groups have not, and means that those that have do so without necessarily adopting the correct view. It is important to note that students who do not understand a question are not given a choice of answers. If the students think that understanding is the best answer, they will choose it. Understanding is not sufficient to select the correct answer. Students are required to select the best answer.
