Eaves, 2025-11-27 Over the past 20 years there has been a significant shift in our understanding of the motor system It is no longer viewed as a mere executor of motor actions but rather as a system also engaged during action observation and recognition imagination and even verbal descriptions of actions It is currently unclear to what extent the neural structures involved in these functions overlap with each other or are distinctively and differently active across functions We will use the term action re enactment to refer to the recruitment of neural structures that are involved in action execution in the absence of physical execution itself Within this theoretical framework there is increasing interest in the role of cognitive strategies that exploit action re enactment like motor imagery and action observation in motor learning and rehabilitation By observation imitation and imagery of movements we can acquire new motor skills and refine our motor abilities possibly via the re organization of already acquired and well established motor competence Hence the potential role of these cognitive strategies in sports training and educational activities for example learning a musical instrument These cognitive strategies are also useful in the case of neurological and non neurological diseases when patients must recover their affected motor skills Action observation treatment and motor imagery have proven to be effective for motor rehabilitation of patients with stroke Parkinson's disease cerebral palsy and patients with orthopedic diseases This Research Topic aims to offer a state of the art overview of the recent advancements in cognitive strategies that involve action re enactment We will collect papers focusing on the neurophysiological and anatomical bases of motor imagery and action observation recognition as well as their use in learning re learning as in the case of rehabilitation motor skills in social contexts as well as in clinical practice Moreover papers assessing the effectiveness of these cognitive strategies when combined or associated with other approaches like virtual reality and the use of wearable devices along with studies on the use of these cognitive strategies in home based training will be of interest We will include articles exploiting neurophysiological brain imaging and behavioral techniques Considering the relevance and huge potential application of cognitive strategies in different contexts we hope this Research Topic will meet the interest of different researchers including psychologists neuroscientists sports scientists neurologists physiatrists and physiotherapists Future Music ,2006 Anatomy of a Home Studio Scott R. Wilkinson,1997 From the pages of Electronic Musician magazine come these words of wisdom from Scott Wilkinson He bridges the information gap between beginner and high end user as he demystifies the decibel explains SCSI secrets and makes sense of MIDI Other topics include the principles of digital audio effects processors microphones and more You'll also get two glossaries one general and the other packed with Internet terms Keyboard ,2006 Option ,1988 Home & Studio Recording ,1990 Modular Digital Multitracks George Petersen,1997 A manual on modular digital multitracks It discusses the equipment provides evaluation of the units and demonstrates advanced operating techniques It also advises on how to save money by making your own cables and snakes EQ ,2000 Microtimes ,1988-10 Percussive Notes ,1992 Studio Sound ,2001 The Mix ,1997 Mix ,1993 Billboard ,1995-07-01 In its 114th year Billboard remains
