

World Port Centre

The grey, high-rise World Port Centre, which contains the offices of the harbour authority, was designed by Lord Norman Foster as a part of his redevelopment master plan for Wilhelminapier. While he arranged all of the new residential high-rises along the southern waterfront, the northern piers were reserved for office buildings. The World Port Centre consists of a rectangular, 80-metre-high tower to the west, a multi-level, 100-metre-high tower to the east, and a glazed lobby that links both parts of the building. The top floor of the building contains a calorically managed centre for the harbour.

The canopy above the ground floor provides shelter for pedestrians from the strong winds in this area at the tip of the pier. Just next door, on the other side of the car park, is an earlier and comparatively modestly scaled work by Foster: the low-rise office of the Marine Management Centre (2003), whose future caption can probably find nothing useful in a 360-degree view.
