

ANCIENT GREECE

a series of architecture

Greek architecture refers to the architecture of the Greek-speaking peoples who inhabited the Greek mainland and the Peloponnese, the islands of the Aegean Sea, the Greek colonies in Ionia and Magna Graecia.

1 TEMPLE

The most recognizably "Greek" structure is the temple. The earliest shrines were built to honor divinities and were made from materials such as wood and mud brick—materials that typically don't survive very long. Greek temples are often categorized in terms of their ground plan and the way in which the columns are arranged. A prostyle temple is a temple that has columns only at the front, while an amphiprostyle temple has columns at the front and the rear.

THEATER 2

The Greek theater was a large, open-air structure used for dramatic performance. Theaters often took advantage of hillsides and naturally sloping terrain and, in general, utilized the panoramic landscape as the backdrop to the stage itself. The Greek theater is composed of the seating area (theatron), a circular space for the chorus to perform (orchestra), and the stage (skene).

3 BOULEUTERION

The Bouleuterion (Bouleuterion) was an important civic building in a Greek city, as it was the meeting place of the boule (citizen council) of the city. These select representatives assembled to handle public affairs and represent the citizenry of the polis. The bouleuterion generally was a covered, rectangular building with stepped seating surrounding a central speaker's well in which an altar was placed.

4 GREEK HOUSES

Greek houses usually were centered on a courtyard that would have been the scene for various ritual activities; the courtyard also provided natural light for the often small houses.

5 OTHER STRUCTURES

Other notable structures are Stadium, gymnasium, and palaestra. Fortifications: During the Mycenaean, Stoa, Altar, and fountain houses.
