Assigning Scientific Names Biologists have a great diversity of organisms. Biologists categorize each organism's name. Biologists classify organisms into groups and assign each organism a scientific name. Biologists use a classification system. This system of naming and grouping organisms is called taxonomy.

In the 1700s, Swedish Linnaeus developed a naming system, called binomial nomenclature, to classify organisms. Each species is assigned a two-part scientific name.

- The first part of the name refers to the genus, or a group of similar species.
- The second part of the name is unique to each species.

Linnaeus's Classification System Linnaeus's system of classification has seven different levels. From smallest to largest, the levels are species, genus, family, order, class, phylum, and kingdom. Each of the naming levels is called a taxon.

- Genus is a group of similar species, a family is a group of similar genera.
- An order is a group of similar families.
