

DENSITY AND BUOYANCY

The image displays three overlapping worksheets titled "Density and Buoyancy". The central worksheet is fully visible and contains the following content:

Density and Buoyancy

Name: _____

Reading Passage

Read the passage carefully before answering the questions that follow.

Density is a measure of how much mass is contained within a given volume of a substance. It is calculated by dividing an object's mass by its volume and is expressed in units such as grams per cubic centimeter (g/cm³). Substances with higher density than water, such as metals, tend to sink when placed in water, whereas those with lower density, such as wood, float. In fact, the density of water is 1 g/cm³, which serves as a reference point for many other substances.

The concept of buoyancy, which is the upward force exerted on an object submerged in a fluid, depends on the fluid's density and the volume of fluid displaced by the object. This principle, known as Archimedes' principle, explains why ships made of steel can float, although steel is much denser than water. The shape of a ship's hull allows a large volume of water (creating enough buoyant force) to keep it afloat. Density, for all liquids and gases, increases with pressure. For instance, the density of water increases with pressure, but the effect is negligible for most practical purposes. Similarly, the density of gases increases significantly with pressure, which is why a gas cylinder feels heavier when it is full.

Changes in density are also responsible for many natural phenomena. For instance, ice floats on water because it has a lower density than liquid water. This allows aquatic life to survive beneath the frozen surface. In the ocean, differences in water density caused by temperature and salinity variations drive important ocean currents that distribute heat around the globe. Understanding density and buoyancy helps explain everything from why a hot air balloon rises to how a submarine operates, highlighting the interconnectedness of these properties in the natural world.

True or False: Density and Buoyancy Concepts

Answer: True or False (T/F)

1. An object with a higher density than water will sink when placed in water. (T/F)
2. A ship floats because it displaces enough water to balance its weight, despite being made of heavy metal. (T/F)
3. Ice floats on water because it is less dense than the water it displaces. (T/F)
4. Ice floats on water because it has a lower density than liquid water. (T/F)
5. Objects with less volume displace less fluid and experience less buoyant force. (T/F)

The other two worksheets on the left and right show similar question formats, including multiple-choice and true/false questions related to density and buoyancy.
