Amphibian Conservation

Amphibians are the only vertebrates that can live both on land and in water. They are also the only vertebrates that can breathe through their skin. This makes them very sensitive to changes in their environment, especially to pollution and habitat loss.

Conservation efforts are needed to protect amphibians. This includes protecting their habitats, reducing pollution, and conducting research to better understand their needs.

Amphibians are important to ecosystems. They eat insects and other small animals, and they are eaten by larger animals. They also help to control the population of insects and other pests.
