Alligators

Alligators are found in various parts of the world, but they are most commonly associated with the southeastern United States and parts of China. Latin America and the world of crocodiles also explore their various characteristics.

Alligators belong to the crocodilian family, which also includes crocodiles and caimans. They have a distinctive crocodile-like snout, elongated snout and a flat top head. One of the main reasons because of alligators is their unique body, consisting of scales, skin, and fat. The scales not only provide protection but also helps them regulate their body temperature.

Alligators are semi-aquatic in their natural habitat. They are excellent swimmers and move faster than most when they move groundwater through their water. Despite their seemingly slow movements, alligators can be surprisingly fast and light in the water. They use their powerful tails to power themselves forward, moving their efficient flippers.

Speaking of hunting, alligators are carnivores, meaning they primarily eat meat. Their diet includes fish, turtles, birds, and other mammals. They venture far away to the water's edge.
