Ellipticity: systems have orbits, paths of moving, gravitating bodies which follow elliptical paths.

Elliptical orbits

Elliptical orbits are closed curves, which have two foci. The bodies moving along these orbits precess around the two foci, moving along the closed elliptical paths. They are not straight lines, as shown below in most ellipses, except for the special case of a parabolic trajectory.

Elliptical orbits follow the second law of Kepler's laws, which states that the area swept by the line connecting the moving body to the focus is constant. This indicates that the body moves faster when it is closer to the focus and slower when it is further away.
