Written for sleep technologists Clinical Atlas of Polysomnography provides basic information regarding normal sleep sleep disorders and electrophysiology that is outside of the scope of the AASM manual AASM Manual for the Scoring of Sleep and Associated Events It aims to act as a guide through the fundamental aspects of for example types of overnight sleep study establishing a sleep laboratory preparing the patient for a sleep evaluation study placement of electrodes and leads and the scientific aspects of such placement i e why they are placed at that particular position This information will be very useful in those parts of the globe where formal training in sleep technology is not yet available Many further chapters focus on depicting real time illustrations of sleep data as captured in the sleep laboratory and the scoring of recording data

Information regarding common montages artifacts and troubleshooting in the sleep laboratory will facilitate the reader s journey as a trainee sleep technologist While scoring sleep recordings the When you score the data histogram can provide a great deal of useful information and this has been explained in detail in this book Most importantly it is prudent to be able to write reports that are both informative and easy to understand by physicians who do not have advanced knowledge of sleep medicine A chapter has been dedicated to explaining this in detail Lastly the authors have provided ready made forms questionnaires and documents that can either be used as they are or with some modifications This up to date and comprehensive volume will be an invaluable guide for technicians and physicians who wish to practice sleep medicine and will be useful for sleep technology and physician training programs The volume is intended to complement not be a substitute for the AASM scoring manual as many areas that are covered in the manual are not covered here

Automatic Sleep Classification Using the New Sleep Stage Standards Elizabeth Ann Fehrman,2013 Sleep is fundamental for physical health and good quality of life and clinicians and researchers have long debated how best to understand it. Manual approaches to sleep classification have been in use for over 40 years and in 2007 the American Academy of Sleep Medicine AASM published a new sleep scoring manual. Over the years many attempts have been made to introduce and validate machine learning and automated classification techniques in the sleep research field with the goals of improving consistency and reliability. This thesis explored and assessed the use of automated classification systems with the updated sleep stage definitions and scoring rules using neuro fuzzy system NFS and support vector machine SVM methodology. For both the NFS and SVM classification techniques the overall percent correct was approximately 65% with sensitivity and specificity rates around 80% and 95% respectively. The overall Kappa scores one means for evaluating system reliability were approximately 0.57 for both the NFS and SVM indicating moderate agreement that is not accidental. Stage 3 sleep was detected with an 87.89% success rate. The results presented in this thesis show that the use of NFS and SVM methods for classifying sleep stages is possible using the new AASM guidelines. While the current work supports and confirms the use of these classification techniques within the research community the results did not indicate a significant difference in the accuracy of either approach nor a difference in one over the other. The results suggest that the important clinical stage 3 slow wave sleep can be accurately scored with these classifiers however the techniques used here would need more investigation and optimization prior to serious use in clinical applications.
