It is important, says Michael Porter, "to determine the precise boundaries of a company's various stakeholders and then consider which of these stakeholders are part of the business's life." He calls it a "stakeholder map," and says it can be used to identify the most important stakeholders in a company. Porter's "Stakeholder map" is a diagram that shows the relationships between a company and its stakeholders. It is a useful tool for identifying the most important stakeholders in a company and for understanding the relationships between a company and its stakeholders.
