Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 employees from three companies who performed different types of work. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers performing manual labor than among those performing office or service work.

After using a 10-minute period, the results are as follows: the only significant difference between the two groups is the number of correct answers. The number of correct answers is significantly higher in the group that used the 10-minute period.

From the bottom compartment (Fig. 2b) the material is drawn upwards through the top hole until it reaches the upper compartment, where it is held in place by the flange. As the material is drawn upwards, it is held in place by the flange. As the material is drawn upwards, it is held in place by the flange.
