

Welcome back and as we celebrate the 381st anniversary of Galilei Galileo's death we make this edition of our 10 edition special concentrating on the topic: What don't we yet know ? about The Matter Antimatter asymmetry, one of the biggest unsolved mysteries in physics and a key topic that reveals the incomplete aspect of our standard model of matter.

What is Antimatter ?

Antimatter particles, as weird as it sounds are just like "normal" particles but the difference is they have opposite charge. For example a positron is the antimatter cousin of the electron and is hence a positively charged electron (Positron). An antiproton is a negatively charged proton that is the result of having antiquarks instead of quarks (Remember that quarks are elementary particles that are the building blocks of protons and neutrons, for a visual representation see figure 1.) (Antimatter: The Big Questions (2019))

A simple difference with grave consequences. If an Antimatter particle and a matter particle meet, they annihilate each other and release significant amounts of energy. In fact, so much energy that half a gram of antimatter and matter colliding would have the same power as the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima (Antimatter: The Big Questions (2019)). Scary right? Well don't stay up at night because antimatter is extremely rare, and it is only found in tiny quantities. The question is why? Because we think it shouldn't be. That is where the incredibly reliable standard model of matter falls short, it doesn't show us why, in fact it predicts that there should be as much antimatter as there is normal matter. (How Antimatter Matters (2019)) This leads us to think there may be entire sections of our SM (standard model) that have not been discovered. Anyway, more on that later. Back to antimatter, these anti particles can conjoin to form antiatoms, for example an antiproton and a positron (remember an anti electron is commonly known as a positron) can form an antihydrogen atom just like an electron and a proton form an atom of hydrogen. We are nearly certain that everything is identical between the two except the charge. We say nearly because as science has proven time and time again, there are many surprises and we have not conducted nearly enough experiments yet to be sure.

The Asymmetry

As we said our much cherished Standard model of matter predicts that during the Big Bang equal amounts of matter and antimatter should have been produced. (Antimatter Asymmetry? (2019)) Simple right? But like we said with the annihilation between matter and antimatter would leave nothing left except energy (Gamma rays to be precise). So that is our issue, according to the SM we should not be here. But we are here and we have a few ideas of what could have happened. The first and most alarming is that it's just out somewhere far away, theoretically there could be entire galaxies made of antimatter where civilisations are questioning what happened to all their "antimatter". But despite the seemingly infinite stretches of intergalactic space in between, there should still be some annihilation and we should consequently be able to observe the gamma rays that are emitted. (Antimatter Asymmetry (2019)) But we can't, making this theory fascinating but not the most probable. But who knows their could be an anti me writing this and an anti you reading this. So our main reasoning seems quite straightforward : There simply must be more matter than antimatter in the universe. But it's never that easy in science, you have to prove it. As Cillian Murphy said in the mildly overrated Oppenheimer's Theory can only take you so far. But at this moment in time, that is what we have just theories, but our friends at CERN and Fermilab are working on it (more on page 4). Most theories that could explain the asymmetry would need an alteration or addition to the standard model of matter to satisfy them. (Antimatter Asymmetry? (2019)) Revealing that from what we currently know, the SM just does not give us enough to explain some very important things. All leading theories posit that something caused an imbalance in the matter-antimatter ratio so that there ended up being a little bit more matter than antimatter. According to Fermilab's Don Lincoln the author of Einstein's unfinished Dream, it is thought that for every 3 billion antimatter particles there was 3 billion and one matter particles. That one is what was left over and here we are.

Not to be confused with Dark Matter

It is easy to become confused between Dark matter and Antimatter but they are two very distinct things, dark matter is a form of matter that does not emit, absorb or reflect light and it is only known to exist because it's gravitational effects can be observed on galaxies. Antimatter is the same as normal matter except it has opposite charge.

Why isn't an antiproton just a proton? The mass of a proton is significantly greater than the mass of an electron (1836 times to be exact) (Antimatter: The Big Questions (2019)) and remember that positrons have the same mass as an electron so there is the first big difference, on top of this electrons and positrons are elementary matter (Not made up of anything else) Whilst protons are not elementary particles, they are made up of quarks.
