A Christmas Credit:

A Christmas Credit Dick Fletcher,2014-12-01 Four long years and more the people of Britain had suffered the icy blast of austerity or to be more accurate most people had endured its biting effects The disabled and those unable to find work had their income withdrawn or cut in the name of welfare reform Even the employed and under employed lost out in real terms as price inflation outpaced wage increases Not everyone had to suffer Those with sufficient means were protected from the bitter medicine others had to take So why did this happen Where did the cold come from It came from within From the frozen waste that counts as a heart amongst those who are immune to human suffering and have no fellow feeling So it was that on the coldest and bleakest Christmas eve for many a year two members her majesty s coalition government decided to take stock of their success They just happened to be in London but they would have encountered a similar scene at any food bank or job centre in the country Their mission was not to provide comfort and joy at least not to the poor souls forced to live off the charity of others They were there to ensure that the plan to make work pay was having its desired effect Judging by the lack of gratitude shown to them and the false expectations of those they met however all was not well in the land of austerity
