American Diploma Project (ADP) End-of-Course Exams Achieve, Inc, 2009 To ensure that all high school graduates are prepared for the opportunities and challenges that await them states have increasingly been focused on aligning their end of high school expectations with the demands of the real world In 2005 no state had aligned their expectations with real world demands now 29 states have adopted college and career ready standards in English and or mathematics And as standards in mathematics have risen so too have graduation requirements Currently 19 states and District of Columbia require students to study mathematics through Algebra II or its equivalent in order to earn a high school diploma These policies are well grounded advanced mathematics courses such as Algebra II improve access to postsecondary education reduce the need for remediation and significantly increase the odds that a student will earn a degree Particularly for disadvantaged students advanced mathematics coursework in high school significantly narrows the equity gap improving access to and success in college and in future economic opportunities To assess these raised expectations a group of American Diploma Project ADP network states formed the ADP Assessment Consortium The Consortium created Algebra I and II end of course exams that provide an honest assessment of whether a student has mastered the content in the course they have just completed and is prepared for higher level mathematics coursework By design the tests are challenging States in the Consortium knew that what they were undertaking wouldn t be easy and that early results would be disappointing But they believed that by setting the bar appropriately high they could collectively challenge themselves their systems and their schools to improve secondary mathematics education for the benefit of all students The ADP Assessment Consortium states have shown that multistate partnerships are not just possible but that they can be a vehicle for driving change The states have in fact been engaged in a voluntary race to the top Even in the face of disappointing first year results for the ADP Algebra II exam and an economic recession that severely impacted state budgets these states have stayed the course giving more exams this year than last and willingly disclosing the results and the challenges they face No state alone could do what the 15 Consortium states have managed together While there is plenty of hard work ahead the ADP Assessment Consortium states have already demonstrated that they can move faster and more economically together than they ever could have going it alone The report concludes that if states can be as successful on these critical next steps as they have been in creating the assessments they will have truly changed the prospects for their students by ensuring that student choices regarding their future college and career plans are based on having a strong foundation in mathematics that makes all paths possible Contains 10 tables and 8 footnotes

Science and Engineering for Grades 6-12 National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine, National Academy of Engineering, Division of Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education, Board on Science Education, Committee on Science Investigations and Engineering Design Experiences in Grades 6-12, 2019-03-12 It is essential for today's students to learn about science and engineering in order to make sense of the world around them and participate as informed members of a democratic society The skills and ways of thinking that are developed and honed through engaging in scientific and engineering endeavors can be used to engage with evidence in making personal decisions to participate responsibly in civic life and to improve and maintain the health of the environment as well as to prepare for careers that use science and technology The majority of Americans learn most of what they know about science and engineering as middle and high school students During these years of rapid change for students knowledge attitudes and interests they can be engaged in learning science and engineering through schoolwork that piques their curiosity about the phenomena around them in ways that are relevant to their local surroundings and to their culture Many decades of education research provide strong evidence for effective practices in teaching and learning of science and engineering One of the effective practices that helps students learn is to engage in science investigation and engineering design Broad implementation of science investigation and engineering design and other evidence based practices in middle and high schools can help address present day and future national challenges including broadening access to science and engineering for communities who have traditionally been underrepresented and improving students educational and life experiences Science and Engineering for Grades 6-12 Investigation and Design at the Center revisits America's Lab Report Investigations in High School Science in order to consider its discussion of laboratory experiences and teacher and school readiness in an updated context It considers how to engage today's middle and high school students in doing science and engineering through an analysis of evidence and examples This report provides guidance for teachers administrators creators of instructional resources and leaders in teacher professional learning on how to support students as they make sense of phenomena gather and analyze data information construct explanations and design solutions and communicate reasoning to self and others during science investigation and engineering design It also provides guidance to help educators get started with designing implementing and assessing investigation and design     Contextualizing Global Flows of Competency-Based Education Kathryn Anderson-Levitt, Meg P. Gardinier, 2023-10-31 The new comparative research in this volume explores the global flow of competence based education curricular policy and frameworks for instructional practice Taking critical perspectives the chapters trace the pathways through which educators and policy actors adopted and reshaped competence based education as promoted by the OECD the World Bank and the European Union The authors ask What purposes do competence based educational reforms serve How are competence based models internationally deployed and locally modified What happens as competence based reforms get re contextualized and contested in particular cultural social and political contexts In their nuanced examination of these global flows the authors theorize how competence based reform strategies variously produce hybridity silent borrowing loud borrowing and new social imaginaries Although entangled with other hot topics in educational research skills and dispositions for citizenship and employment higher order and critical thinking and socio emotional learning competence itself has multiple fluid meanings The authors dissect this polysemy while documenting the pivotal role of key actors in the development design and deployment of reforms in diverse international contexts Contextualizing Global Flows of Competency Based Education will be a key resource for academics researchers and advanced students of comparative education educational research curriculum studies sociology and education leadership and policy This book was originally published as a special issue of Comparative Education     Ready Or Not Achieve, Inc., Washington, DC., 2004 The High School diploma has lost its value because what it takes to earn one is disconnected from what it takes for graduates to compete successfully beyond high school either in the classroom or in the workplace Re establishing the value of the diploma will require the creation of an inextricable link between high school exit expectations and the intellectual challenges that graduates invariably will face in credit bearing college courses or in high performance high growth jobs This report presents the starting point for restoring the value of the American high school diploma by describing in specific terms the English and mathematics that graduates must have mastered by the time they leave high school if they expect to succeed in postsecondary education or in high performance high growth jobs The report also presents actual workplace tasks and postsecondary assignments that illustrate the practical application of the must have competencies described in the benchmarks themselves The American Diploma Project s college and workplace readiness benchmarks offer the solid foundation upon which states can raise academic expectations and build education systems that will enable students to reach these goals Without clear academic expectations that have currency beyond 12th grade as those described in this report do states efforts to improve high schools undoubtedly will fail Contains 17 endnotes This report was prepared by The American Diploma Project ADP at Achieve Inc     Symposium ,2009     In Common No More Arnold F.
