

7. Atomic Spectra Experiment

Preparation

In this experiment, you will build a FPGC spectrograph to analyze the emission spectrum of a hydrogen discharge lamp (HDL).

Theory

Atomic spectra, corresponding to changes in energy states in a semi-classical analogy, show various wavelengths emitted when electrons in hydrogen ions return to ground state from excited states. The energy levels of hydrogen are described by the Bohr model, which states that the energy of an electron in a given orbit is proportional to the inverse square of the principal quantum number n . The energy levels are given by the equation:

$$E_n = -\frac{13.6 \text{ eV}}{n^2} \quad (1)$$

where E_n is the energy of the electron in the n th orbit, n is the principal quantum number, and 13.6 eV is the ionization energy of hydrogen.

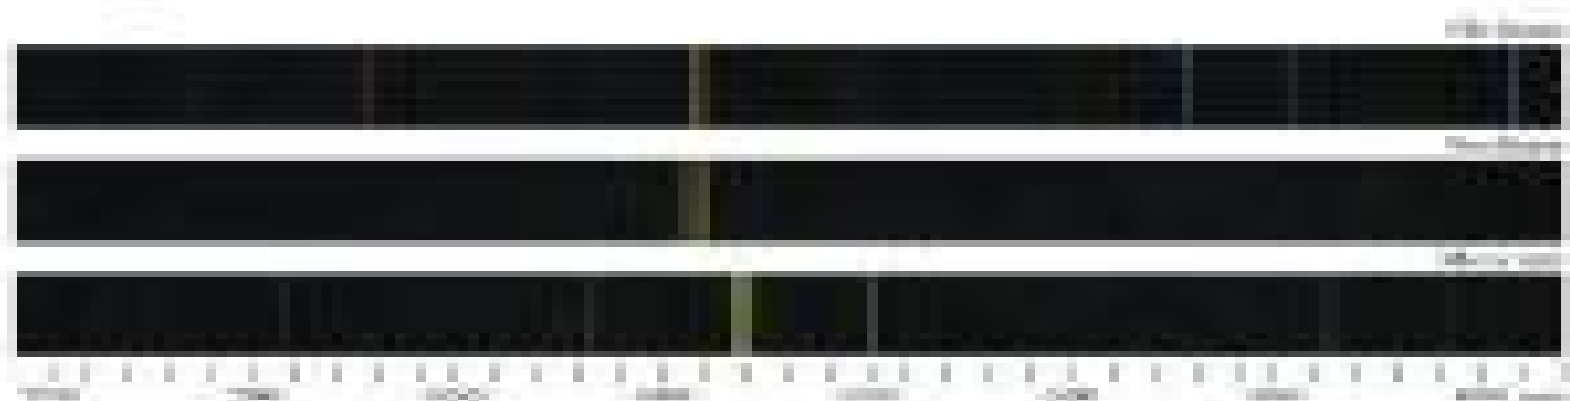

Figure 1. Emission spectrum of the HDL (hydrogen discharge lamp). The spectrum shows the characteristic lines of hydrogen. The most prominent line is the H α line, which is the transition from the $n=3$ state to the $n=2$ state. The other lines are the H β , H γ , and H δ lines, which correspond to transitions from higher states to the $n=2$ state.
