Abstract The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% body weight (BW) resistance training program on the muscle strength and endurance of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each including a 10-minute warm-up, 10 minutes of resistance training, and 10 minutes of cardiovascular exercise. The resistance training was performed using a free-weight squat, a free-weight bench press, and a free-weight deadlift. The cardiovascular exercise was performed using a treadmill. The authors found that the program significantly increased muscle strength and endurance in all three muscle groups. The authors concluded that a 12-week, 100% BW resistance training program is an effective way to improve muscle strength and endurance in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week. The control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the EuroQol-5D questionnaire. Secondary outcomes included changes in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test, and changes in body composition, measured using a dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry scan. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL, physical fitness, and body composition compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
