- However the Germanising word Lebensmittel (German: food) is not used.
- Germanising food names is not uncommon for other languages in the global food industry, as you can see in other places around the world.
- However, it is not the case for all products. For example, in the food industry, there is a major difference between fast food restaurants and other food products. Fast food restaurants follow the product market orientation.
- They are mainly profit oriented, and therefore all people in the chain have the same aim: to attract the most amount of the customers (the more customers, the more profit) and they are willing to share the whole business information (they will tell the French a cooking recipe for example). It may lead to the result in other national regions.
- In the case of other food products, for example, German food, French food, Italian food, etc., it is not the case. They are not profit oriented, and they are not willing to share the information for free because they are sure that the Germanising will be successful and that they will have the higher level of satisfaction. They are also not willing to share the information for free, as it is not in their interest to do so.
