

The Media and CyberPolitics

Historically, the printed media played the most important role in informing public debate. Today, more than 70% of all Americans use television news as their primary source of information. The Internet has become a source of political communication and fund-raising.

The Media's Functions

- Entertainment – the greatest number of radio and television hours are dedicated to entertaining the public. Although there is no direct linkage between entertainment and politics, network dramas often introduce material that may be politically controversial and that may stimulate public discussion.
- Reporting The News – a primary function of the mass media in all their forms – newspapers, magazines, radio, television, cable, on-line news services – is the reporting of news. The media convey words and pictures about events, facts, personalities, and ideas. The protections of the 1st Amendment are intended to keep the flow of the news as free as possible, because it is an essential part of the democratic process. If citizens cannot get unbiased information about the state of their communities and their leaders' actions, how can they make voting decisions?
- Identifying Public Problems – The power of information is important not only in revealing what the government is doing but also in determining what the government ought to do – in other words, in setting the public agenda. The mass media identify public issues. The media then influence the passage of legislation. American journalists also work on uncovering public wrongdoing, corruption and bribery and of bringing it to the public's attention.
- Socializing New Generations – the media, particularly television, strongly influence the beliefs and opinions of all Americans. Because of this influence, the media play a significant role in the political socialization of the younger generation, as well as immigrants in this country.
- Providing a Political Forum – the media provides a political forum for leaders and the public. Candidates for office use news reporting to sustain interest in their campaigns, whereas officeholders use the media to gain support for their policies or to present an image of leadership. The media also offer a way for citizens to participate in public debate, through letters to the editor, televised editorials, or electronic mail.
- Making Profits – Profits are made, in general, by charging for advertising. Advertising revenues usually are related directly to circulation or to listener/viewer ratings.
 - ⊗ Added up, these factors form the basis for a complex relationship among the media, the government and the public.

History of the Media in the United States

- Although the media have played a significant role in politics since the founding of this nation, they were not as overwhelmingly important in the past as they are today.
 - ⊗ For one thing, politics was controlled by a small elite who communicated personally.
 - ⊗ During the 1800s and before, news traveled slowly.
 - ⊗ Roughly 3000 newspapers were being published by 1860. Some of these were mainly sensation mongers that concentrated on crimes, scandals, and the like.
 - ⊗ Many historians believe that the growth of the printed media played an important role in unifying the country.
- The Rise of the Political Press – in the early years of the nation's history, the number of politically sponsored newspapers was significant. The sole reason for the existence of such periodicals was to further the interests of the politicians who paid for their publication.
- The Development of Mass-Readership Newspapers –
- The Popular Press and Yellow Journalism – in the last half of the 1800s even if newspaper owners didn't have a particular political axe to grind, they often allowed their editors to engage in sensationalism ("yellow journalism")
- The Age of the Electromagnetic Signal – the first radio program in the United States featured politicians in 1920. By 1924, there were nearly 1400 radio stations. Even with the advent of national radio in the 1920s and television in the late 1940s, many politicians were slow to understand the significance of the electronic media. The 1952 presidential campaign was the first to involve a real role for television. Today, television dominates the campaign strategy of every elected official.
- The Revolution in Electronic Media – just as technological change was responsible for the end of politically sponsored periodicals, technology is increasing the number of alternative news sources today. With the thousands of potential outlets for specialized programs, the electronic media are becoming more and more like the printed media in catering to specialized tastes. This is known as "narrowcasting."
 - ⊗ Consumers watch only those shows and channels that they like, and the 3 major networks' audiences are declining (between 1982 and 2001, network television's share of the audience fell from 72% to 55%). At the same time, the percentage of households having access to the Internet grew from zero to more than 50%.
- Talk-Show Politics – In the realm of politics, the multiple news outlets have given rise to thousands of talk shows, whether on television, radio, or the Internet. The real blossoming of "talk" has occurred on the radio. There has been considerable criticism of the political talk shows. Critics contend that such shows increase the level of intolerance and irrationality in American politics. The listeners to these shows are self-selected and tend to share the viewpoint of the host. Similarly the Internet makes it possible for a Web site to be highly ideological or partisan and to encourage chat with others of the same persuasion. One of the potential hazards of narrowcasting of this kind is that people will be less open to dialogue with those whose opinions differ from their own and that more extremism in politics may result.

Future Perspectives in Behavior Therapy Larry Michelson,Michel Hersen,Samuel M. Turner,2013-11-11

Contemporary behavior therapy encompasses diverse conceptual positions clinical and applied problems and intervention

techniques Behavior therapy has spread to several disciplines to provide substantive concepts and procedures as well as methodological tenets regarding how intervention techniques are to be evaluated The proliferation of behavior therapy research has produced a plethora of texts Typically texts review the history of particular treatments and detail contemporary advances The historical underpinnings are often emphasized with the heavily labored view that in order to understand where one is going it is important to understand where one has been To be sure historical roots of behavior therapy are important to document However a given history might have many different outcomes Similarly the current status of particular areas is frequently reviewed Sometimes the number of reviews seems to approach or exceed the number of sound studies that there are to be reviewed A review of current work is obviously essential but leaves open major questions of where the work will all lead A valuable addition to existing reviews would be information that points in a prescriptive or explicit way to areas that are likely to be important in future work The present book is unique in its approach and focus Brief reviews of contemporary advances are provided in diverse areas of behavior therapy and serve as a point of departure to chart emerging trends and future directions
