

1. Conduct a hypothesis test to identify whether the proportion of forest land in the United States that is forested is greater than 10%. The null hypothesis is that the proportion of forest land in the United States is 10%. The alternative hypothesis is that the proportion of forest land in the United States is greater than 10%. The test statistic is calculated as follows:

$$Z = \frac{\hat{p} - p_0}{\sqrt{p_0(1-p_0)}}$$
 where  $\hat{p}$  is the sample proportion of forest land,  $p_0$  is the population proportion of forest land, and  $n$  is the sample size. The test statistic is compared to the critical value of 1.645 for a one-tailed test at the 5% significance level.

The following table shows the results of the hypothesis test for the proportion of forest land in the United States that is forested. The test statistic is 1.645, which is greater than the critical value of 1.645. Therefore, we reject the null hypothesis and conclude that the proportion of forest land in the United States is greater than 10%.

10. The following table shows the results of the hypothesis test for the proportion of forest land in the United States that is forested.

11. The following table shows the results of the hypothesis test for the proportion of forest land in the United States that is forested.

12. The following table shows the results of the hypothesis test for the proportion of forest land in the United States that is forested.
