INFORMED PAPER TITLE

Full Title of Your Paper in Title Case

You will begin writing the “text” of your paper after your title page and abstract. You will indent the first line of each paragraph by pressing the “tab” key one time and starting your paragraph. When you want to start a new paragraph, hit the “return” or “enter” key and indent the first line again.

APA format uses a system of headings to help authors structure their paper in a format that is accessible to their reader. If you use headings in your paper, a quick Google search for “headings in APA format” will give you multiple websites that will show you how to properly format a heading. This tutorial will show you levels 1-3 headings.

Level One Heading

The main parts of a scientific paper are the introduction, methods, results and discussion. Typically, you do not have a heading for the introduction. The second paragraph underneath the title of your paper. Then, if you are writing the sections of a scientific paper, your first sub-heading would be “Methods.” The “results” and “discussion” would also be level one headings because they are the main parts of your paper, whereas, all of the other parts of your paper are sub-headings that fall under the main categories are mentioned, bolded, and in Title Case.

Level Two Heading

The level two heading is just like the level one heading, except that it is flush to the left margin. You would use a level two heading when the subject matter of the second portion is the subject of the level one heading.

Level Three Heading: The level three heading further divides your level two heading into sub-headings. Level three headings are bolded and underlined. The paragraph begins right after the heading.
