

The Arguments Against Euthanasia

Is there a moral difference between killing someone and letting someone die? Personally, I feel like there is not a moral difference between killing someone and letting someone die. Once people start becoming the judge over whether someone lives or dies the whole human race is going down a slippery slope to creating a superior human being devoid of any defects. Where does one draw the line? Right now, it is permissible to kill an infant with Down's syndrome if they have an intestinal obstruction. Next week, will it be okay to kill an infant because they have diabetes? In 20 years, will it be okay to kill someone because they have hearing defects, less than average intelligence, or bad teeth? When speaking of Down's syndrome in infants, I feel it is immoral to passively let an infant depart this life due to their defects.

In James Rachels' essay "Active and Passive Euthanasia," Rachels claims that it is wrong to let an infant with Down's syndrome and congenital defects die because the parents do not want the doctors to perform an operation on their child. Rachels writes, "Consider again the case of the infants with Down's syndrome who need operations for congenital defects unrelated to the syndrome to live. Sometimes, there is no operation, and the baby dies, but when there is no such defect, the baby lives on. Now, an operation such as that to remove an intestinal obstruction is not prohibitively difficult. The reasons why such operations are not performed in these cases is, clearly, that the child has Down's syndrome and the parents and doctor judge that because of that fact it is better for the child to die." I agree with Rachels that this situation is not moral. Would you want your infant to have a simple operation that would save his or her life? I believe most parents who love their child unconditionally would allow the operation to proceed. If parents choose to forego the operation, I feel as if the parents are basically putting a trigger to their child's head. You should never let your child die because of a defect, no matter the severity, that could be easily treated.

Think about it this way, if your child came out with only nine fingers would you still feel the same way and want to kill them?

Another example of how killing someone and letting someone die is the same act is the Smith and Jones analogy. In James Rachels' article "Active and Passive Euthanasia," he describes two different events in which a child dies. In the first situation, Smith will gain a large amount of inheritance if something were to happen to his six-year-old cousin. One evening, Smith sneaks into the bathroom while his cousin is taking a bath and drowns the child. He then arranges the crime scene so it looks like the death of his cousin was an accident. In the second situation, Jones will also receive a sizeable inheritance if something were to happen to his six-year-old cousin. Jones plans to sneak in the bathro Euthanasia. A Short Overview of Supporting and Opposing Arguments Rodgers Agoi, 2020-06-24. Essay from the year 2020 in the subject Ethics, grade 3, 3 language English, abstract.

This essay tries to shed light on some of the most important arguments supporting as well as opposing euthanasia. Euthanasia as a method of terminating individuals' life is not a universally accepted idea. Several countries legally accept euthanasia. Countries such as Poland, South Africa, Belgium, and Luxembourg legally and actively practice euthanasia. Laws of these countries allow doctors and other health professionals to deliberately end a person's life by administering an overdose of certain drugs that cause death. Sharp. Euthanasia is a highly debated moral issue with considerations such as legal, religious, clinical, and political that play important roles in decision making. Proponents of euthanasia base their arguments on the idea that individuals have the right to choice and self-determination. Scherer. They also argue that there are other methods of ending an individual's life that is widely accepted and argument that is referred to as pragmatic The opponents of euthanasia argue that people might ask for euthanasia because of pain instead of a sane mind Euthanasia may also be used to eliminate people for wrong reasons and that disease can find a cure anytime These arguments have been discussed in detail in the following paragraphs Applying Ethics Jeffrey Olen,Vincent E.
