

HUMAN RIGHTS

GNED 1317

Short Assignment: Limits to Human Rights

Due: End of Week 5

DESCRIPTION:

Human rights are often presented as universal and undeniable. However, as we have seen not all human rights are absolute. In fact, many have clearly defined limitations. For example, the human right to freedom of expression is limited when that expression directly leads to demonstrable harm such as yelling fire in a crowded theatre when there is in fact no fire. Some have used the same reasoning to suggest that other human rights, even the right to be free from torture or other cruel or degrading treatment has limits. For example, in cases where national security is perceived to be threatened some believe torture can help produce information that can save lives. Because of this, such people believe torture is justifiable. Where do you stand: is torture permissible under certain circumstances?

INSTRUCTIONS:

This assignment is an argumentative essay that requires you to present an argument that supports your view on the question above.

A potential format might look like this:

1. Short Introduction: Should include a well-articulated thesis statement (i.e. the main point you want to argue).
2. A Critical Explanation: Explain the main problem regarding torture and its potential limits. It would be prudent to use an example, such as the Ticking Bomb scenario or your own variation of it, to explain this.
3. Your Argument: Present your argument and the reasons supporting it.
4. Objection: Consider what an opponent might criticize in your argument. Be sure to develop this and not simply mention an objection in a couple of sentences.
5. Reply to Objection: Respond to the objection showing how it is wrong and that your initial argument is the correct one.

Think of this assignment as a debate on paper. Like any good debate, be sure to articulate your argument and the reasons supporting it clearly and directly.

Format:

1. Length: approximately 1000 words (roughly 5 pages double spaced at 12 font)
2. Details: first name, last name, and date clearly printed at the top of the page.

DUE: End of Week 5
