Essays In Applied Microeconomics Jay Kody Walker,2012 My dissertation consists of three essays each of which implements different data specification schemes to econometrically analyze specific topics in the realm of applied microeconomics and microeconometrics Three separate questions are asked and economic data is employed to empirically test the validity of alternative answers These essays are encapsulated in ranging economic fields but unified in that microeconomic principles and data analysis methods are employed The initial essay which is co authored with Andrew Hussey and Alex Nikolsko Rzhevskyy titled HIV and Recent Trends in Abortion Rates tests an empirical link between the introduction of HIV AIDS into the overall population and its possible impact on unwanted pregnancies as realized in lower abortions rates is in the realm of public and health economics The second essay titled Greeks Just Want to Have Fun or Do They Fraternal Membership and College Outcomes asks whether or not a student's decision to join a Greek organization during their undergraduate college tenure has significant impacts on collegiate outcomes which delves into the economics of education peer effects and public economics The third essay titled A Structural Model of the U S Orange Juice Market Alternative Evaluation Methods for Dumping Charges takes a particular instance where a domestic industry has claimed that foreign producers have dumped products into the United States domestic market and econometrically tests the validity of those claims This paper's topic is in the realm of international trade public choice and public economics Microeconomics: Undergraduate Essays and Revision Notes Bahrum Lamehdasht,2012-12-13 This book contains essays and revision notes for Microeconomics at the undergraduate level This book includes the following topics Utility Curves Perfect Competition vs Monopoly Oligopoly Collusion Monopolistic Competition Price Discrimination X Efficiency Why do Firms Exist Negative Externalities Positive Externalities Public Goods Adverse Selection General Equilibrium Efficiency Wages Minimum Wages and Unemployment Arrow Pratt Risk Aversion

Essays in Applied Microeconomics Arman Khachiyan,2022 This dissertation contains three essays studying topics in applied microeconomics The first chapter is a co authored paper in which we use daytime satellite imagery and convolutional neural networks to model economic growth at the neighborhood level In the second chapter I use this model to examine the spatial distribution of residential impacts from fracking The third chapter investigates methods of measuring skill distance between occupations and proposes a new method which matches patterns of observed occupational transition Each chapter uses unconventional data sources and machine learning techniques to contribute to central questions in labor economics research and policy In the first chapter we apply deep learning to daytime satellite imagery to predict changes in income and population at high spatial resolution in US data Our model predictions achieve R2 values of and 0.32 to 0.46 in decadal changes which have no counterpart in the literature and are 3-4 times larger than for commonly used nighttime lights Our network has wide application for analyzing localized economic shocks One such application is my second chapter which studies changes in total neighborhood income and population in areas near fracking extraction and shale reserves My microspatial approach identifies that fracking exposure as far as 20 miles away leads to a 2 percent decline in neighborhood income The spatial gradient and associated mechanisms of this effect indicate that it is driven by local industrialization rather than direct environmental externalities Examination reveals margins of policy and labor conditions which attenuate the observed impacts In the third chapter I show that a regression framework generates a novel empirical occupational skill distance norm which is disciplined by observed occupation switching patterns This approach relieves key limitations of existing measures such as linearity and symmetry It also allows for an analysis of which skill dimensions relate to the portability of human capital and which do not Implications for existing results on skill portability are discussed along with immediate policy applications on employee adjustment costs Essays in Microeconomics Tahir Öztürk, 2008 Essays in Applied Microeconomics Lukas Valentin Kuld, 2018 50 Model Essays in A-level Microeconomics Eugene Y. Essays in Microeconomics Anna Sanktjohanser, 2017 Essays in Microeconomics Tracy J. Webb, 1999 Essays in Applied Microeconomics Zachary Aaron Goodman, 2021 This dissertation contains three essays on topics in applied microeconomics The first essay addresses effective pedagogical tools and the latter two essays estimate the effects of two distinct tax policies on nutrient consumption In Chapter 1 we study a novel video based textbook for intermediate microeconomics Using a field experiment involving about 400 undergraduates we estimate the effectiveness of watching videos on exam scores We find that students experimentally induced to watch more videos perform significantly better on the midterm and final exams We find no negative spillovers to other courses within the quarter of the experiment and we find sustained takeup of the videos in the following quarter In Chapter 2 we study the 1 cent per ounce sweetened beverage tax in Cook County the largest tax in terms of population affected of its kind in the United States and the only tax revoked to date We find that the tax significantly decreases sugar purchases while active and has no lasting effects after the tax is revoked We find that the tax has the largest sugar reducing effects for high consumers of regular soda and those who live far from the border of the taxed jurisdiction We weigh the welfare consequences of the tax by estimating the cost of living increase and find that each gram of sugar reduced cost 3.5 to 6.6 cents In Chapter 3 I examine the effects of the 2008 Economic Stimulus Act payments on nutrient purchases I find that households with less than two months of income in savings increase total calories purchased in the month following receipt of the stimulus payment Interestingly the composition of the increased calories is not representative of the pre stimulus nutrient bundle Households greatly increase sugar purchases and do not increase fiber or protein purchases I do not find evidence of sustained changes in nutrient purchases Essays on Applied

Microeconomics Albert Haewon Choi,2001 When a contract is signed between two economic agents it is likely to produce some effect on non contracting third parties and provide new information to the contracting parties This thesis examines how such third party externality and newly generated information should affect the initial form of the contract In the first essay a headquarters of a firm designs a mechanism with which it extracts the division managers superior information about the external market opportunities The information allows the headquarters to provide optimal investment incentive to the managers and make efficient trading decisions The essay provides a justification for a real world headquarters who delegates all the operating decisions to the division managers but maintains the ultimate authority within the firm The second essay examines how a client would contract with her lawyer to provide best incentive to the lawyer and maximize her return from litigation By providing different contingent shares based on settlement and judgment she is able to provide better incentive without diluting her return from litigation At the same time when she has relatively poor bargaining leverage against the counter party the essay shows that delegating the settlement authority to the lawyer and leaving him a large rent would be more beneficial for the client The third essay analyzes the salary contracting problem faced by the owner of a firm who is aware of a potential opportunity to sell her firm in the future The essay demonstrates that when the owner grants a large severance payment to the employee she would be able to defer the compensation burden to the potential buyer and increase her net return from the firm
