

American Government and Civic Engagement

Chapter 5

Defining Civil Rights

Civil Rights: Guarantees by the government that it will treat people equally

- Particularly people belonging to groups that have historically been denied the same rights and opportunities

Laws that treat one group of people differently from others are not always unconstitutional

- The government engages in legal discrimination quite often
- How can the federal, state, and local governments

Equal Protection Clause of the 14th Amendment does not require perfect equality

- State and Federal laws often create classifications

Rational basis test: legitimate government interest

- Fundamental rights and suspect classifications not at issue

Intermediate scrutiny: must serve important government interest

- Applies to issues of gender

Strict scrutiny: must serve compelling government interest

- Fundamental rights and suspect classifications at issue

Identifying Discrimination

Rational basis test

As long as there's a reason for treating some people differently that is "rationally related to a legitimate government interest," the discriminatory act or law or policy is acceptable.

- Ex. laws forbidding blind people from operating cars

The government has to demonstrate only that it has a good reason for engaging in it.

Unless the person or group challenging the law can prove otherwise, the courts will generally decide the discriminatory practice is allowed.

Intermediate scrutiny

Used for discrimination based on gender or sex

- First applied in Craig v. Boren (1976)
  - Oklahoma law prohibited the sale of "nonintoxicating" 3.2 percent beer to males under the age of 21 and to females under the age of 18.
