Our Public Schools - Who's Really in Charge? Ray Czicz, 2004 Every year millions of students are educated through our public school system School is mandatory for both the educators and the students Our government requires that all children receive an education As more families have come to rely on dual incomes and single parent families become more common we have seen changes in how both parents and students view the educational process A lack of discipline and respect on the part of students has placed an increasing burden on our teachers Teachers are faced with a lack of support on the part of parents and administrators to provide solutions to social and scholastic problems We have come to rely on technology and money to solve the problems we face in our schools We have a preconceived notion that all is right in our public schools if you believe as do that we have serious problems in our public schools that these problems need to be addressed and you are searching for solutions then Our Public Schools Who's Really in Charge is a book you need to read Catalog of Copyright
