

United States Government

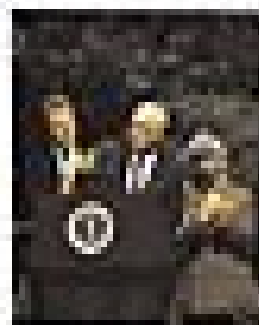

Structure of the Government

The United States is a federal republic. This means that the government is made up of many different parts, each with its own responsibilities. The three main branches of the government are the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Each branch has a specific role to play in the running of the country.

The Executive branch is headed by the President. The President is responsible for enforcing the laws of the country. The Legislative branch is made up of Congress, which is responsible for making laws. The Judicial branch is headed by the Supreme Court and is responsible for interpreting the laws.

Each branch has its own powers and responsibilities. The Executive branch has the power to appoint and remove officials, to declare war, and to negotiate treaties. The Legislative branch has the power to pass laws, to approve or reject treaties, and to confirm or reject appointments. The Judicial branch has the power to interpret the laws and to declare laws unconstitutional.

Major Governmental Branches

The Executive branch is the branch of the federal government that is responsible for enforcing the laws. It is headed by the President, who is elected by the people. The President has the power to appoint and remove officials, to declare war, and to negotiate treaties. The Executive branch also includes the Vice President and the Cabinet.

The Legislative branch is the branch of the federal government that is responsible for making laws. It is made up of two parts: the House of Representatives and the Senate. The House of Representatives is made up of members from each state, while the Senate is made up of two members from each state. The Legislative branch has the power to pass laws, to approve or reject treaties, and to confirm or reject appointments.
