

1 SRS seat curtain airbag operation

1 Driver's side
2 Passenger's side

WARNING

The SRS seat curtain airbag is designed not to deploy when the seatbelt for the corresponding seat is not fastened. For safety of passengers in the vehicle should follow these methods.

The SRS seat curtain airbags are designed to deploy automatically when the SRS frontal airbags deploy. For details about the operating conditions, refer to "SRS/ABS advanced frontal airbag system" p.142.

The front passenger's SRS seat curtain airbag is designed not to deploy in either of the following conditions.

- The front passenger's seatbelt is not fastened prior when the front passenger's frontal airbag (ON indicator illuminates when the OFF indicator remains OFF).
- The front passenger's frontal airbag (ON indicator is off while the OFF indicator illuminates).

NOTE

When the front passenger's SRS front airbag is deactivated by the occupant detection system, the front passenger's SRS seat curtain airbag is also deactivated.

1 SRS side airbag and SRS curtain airbag operation

The driver's and front passenger's SRS side airbags and SRS curtain airbags deploy independently of each other for cases each has its own impact sensor. Therefore, they may not both deploy in the same accident. Also, the SRS side airbag deploys independently of the driver's and front passenger's SRS frontal airbags in the steering wheel and instrument panel.

An impact sensor, which senses impact force, is located in each of the following locations.

force, is located in each of the following locations.

- in the left and right front doors
- in the left and right outer pillars
- in the left and right rear wheel houses
- in the airbag control module
- in the left and right front fenders (only SRS curtain airbags are designed to deploy when the front end sensors sense a serious impact.)

A rollover sensor is also located inside the airbag control module.

If the impact sensor that is located in the airbag control module and one of the corner pillar impact sensors or front door impact sensors together sense an impact force above a predetermined level in a side collision, the control module causes both the SRS side airbag and curtain airbag on the impacted side to inflate regardless of whether the rear wheel house impact sensor on the same side sensed an impact.

If the impact sensor that is located in the airbag control module and one of the rear wheel house impact sensors together sense an impact force above a predetermined level in a side collision, the control module causes only the SRS curtain airbag on the impacted side to inflate.

Even if a frontal collision occurs, both right and left SRS curtain airbags will inflate when the front sensor and the control unit determine that the impact results from an offset frontal collision.

The SRS curtain airbags are designed to deploy when the driver's SRS frontal airbag deploys in the driver's and passenger's SRS frontal airbags deploy in a frontal collision, and also when the system determines that the collision is an offset frontal collision. The SRS curtain airbags are basically designed not to deploy in a frontal collision when the SRS frontal airbags do not deploy, or the system determines that the collision is other than an offset frontal collision.

If the rollover sensor detects rollover of the vehicle, the control module inflates the SRS curtain airbags. In this case, the driver's and front passenger's seatbelt pretensioners also operate at the same time.

After the deployment, the SRS side airbag completely starts to deflate. The time required from detection of an impact to deflation of an SRS side airbag after deployment is shorter than the time of air bag.

The SRS curtain airbag sensors inflation for a while following deployment. Seat steady inflates.

The SRS side airbag and SRS curtain airbag deploy even when it was occurred the seat on the side in which an impact is applied.

The SRS side airbag and SRS curtain airbags are designed to deploy in the event of an accident involving a moderate to severe side impact collision. They are not designed to deploy in most lower side impact. Also, they are not designed to deploy in most rear impacts because SRS side airbag and SRS curtain airbag deployment would not help the occupant in those situations.

The SRS side airbag and SRS curtain airbag deployment depend on the level of force experienced in the passenger side extension during a side impact collision. That force differs from one type of collision to another, and it may have no bearing on the vehicle damage done to the vehicle itself.

The SRS curtain airbags are also designed to deploy when the vehicle is in an extremely inclined state such as during a rollover. They are not designed to deploy in most lower inclined state.
