

A structure for answering legal problems: IRAC

ISSUE

What is the legal issue?

- This means what is the legal question to be answered here.
- The more clear and specific your identification of the issue is, the better your answer will be.
- It is not a good idea to write down everything you know about the topic. This will not help you identify the issue at all. Rather, it may indicate that you are unsure of what the legal issue is.

RULE

What is the applicable rule?

- What is the rule of principle of law (from cases or statutes) whether synthesised or directly derived from a single authority followed by the citation of the relevant authority/authorities?
- Here it is useful to include why the proposed rule is the relevant and applicable one. For example, the reasoning could include a factual comparison to a case we have considered in class.
- What are the elements of the rule?

APPLICATION

What is your analysis of how each element of the rule would apply to the material facts of this case?

- This could involve a direct application of the rule to the facts, or may sometimes require further insight from the relevant authorities as to how the rules should be applied.
- Where applicable, this section should also include any possible counter analysis to the rule application, and your proposed response.

CONCLUSION

Based on your analysis, what is your conclusion in terms of the question you have been asked?

- Remember to answer the question asked. For example, have you been asked to provide advice for a party? If so, then couch your conclusion in terms of the advice you would give this party.
