Koplik's spots are small, white or bluish-white spots that appear on the inside of the cheeks, usually opposite the lower molars, in people who have measles. They are a sign of the infection and can be seen one to four days before the skin rash develops. They are surrounded by a red ring and look like grains of salt. Koplik's spots are very helpful for diagnosing measles, especially when other diseases have similar symptoms.

Most of these diseases are caused by the effect of climate change and anthropogenic activities. The control of EID in emergency settings like countries affected by conflicts and natural disasters is a major health concern. Mass displacement, lack of proper sanitation, and damaged public health infrastructure are the main factors for the spread of infectious diseases in these countries. The dissemination of EID in such settings can lead to fast spread of diseases beyond the borders triggering a global threat. Strategies for early detection, surveillance, and public health interventions are essential to contain and mitigate the risk engendered by EID in affected countries.
