I wasn't a very motivated student when I was younger, so I failed my exams in 1999 and had to retake them the following summer. I'd already decided I wanted to take a gap year then go to business school, so this time I completed all the coursework and revised thoroughly; I passed easily. I spent a year abroad as an assistant in a secondary school and then went to business school – I'd already applied and successfully attended an interview before revisiting my exams.
In my second year as an undergraduate, I spent a semester as an intern at Hewlett Packard, which was very rewarding. In fact, I went straight into a job at HP after I graduated the following June. They encouraged me to do a Master's degree by correspondence – I just have to finish writing a dissertation. I need a break now, but I may take a sabbatical to study for an MBA in a few years' time.

Data Revocation on the Internet Olga

Kieselmann, 2018-01-30 After publishing data on the Internet the data publisher loses control over it However there are several situations where it is desirable to revoke published information To support this the European Commission has elaborated the General Data Protection Regulation GDPR In particular this regulation requires that controllers must delete data on user s demand However the data might already have been copied by third parties Therefore Article 17 of the GDPR includes the regulation that a controller must also inform all affected third parties about revocation requests Hence the controllers would need to track every access which is hard to achieve This technical infeasibility is a gap between the legislation and the current technical possibilities To close it we provide a distributed and decentralized Internet wide data revocation service DRS which is based on the combination of the technical mechanisms and the obligation to follow the legal regulations With the DRS the user can notify automatically and simultaneously all affected controllers about her revocation request Thus we implicitly provide the notification of third parties about the user s request
