

What does signifying the effectiveness of a treatment in a research?

An example for statistical significance in a study is when a treatment group has a significantly higher mean score than the control group. This indicates that the treatment had a positive effect on the outcome variable. However, it is important to note that statistical significance does not necessarily mean that the treatment is effective in the real world. There could be other factors that are influencing the results, and the study may not have been well-designed or conducted properly. Therefore, it is important to interpret the results of a study with caution and to consider the limitations of the study.

1. The first box shows a positive correlation between the two variables. This indicates that as the value of the first variable increases, the value of the second variable also tends to increase.
2. The second box shows a negative correlation between the two variables. This indicates that as the value of the first variable increases, the value of the second variable tends to decrease.
3. The third box shows no clear correlation between the two variables. This indicates that the value of the second variable does not appear to be related to the value of the first variable.
