The Space Race

For over a decade, the United States and the Soviet Union were engaged in a heated competition over space travel. The Soviet race began in 1957 when the Soviet Union launched their first artificial satellite, Sputnik. The Soviet leader, Joseph Stalin, then sent their American astronauts, Dwight Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, and Richard Nixon an agreement that guaranteed Soviet space was safe. Unfortunately, both countries assumed no other purpose than peaceful cooperation and no other intent whatsoever.

Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev wanted to prove that communism supporters were superior. President Kennedy wanted to prove the Soviets had the most. Speaking about the prospect of sending astronauts to the moon in 1961, Kennedy said, "One small step forward for man, one giant leap for mankind." An image important for the long-range expansion of space. And none with the air of difficulty or superiority than moon-gazing.

By reaching the moon first in 1969, the United States won the space race. Soviet and U.S. scientists knew that losing the Moon race to the United States would be an extremely important media event. The Soviet community was extremely interested with great interest. Scientists and government leaders in both countries were under intense pressure to break through boundaries.
