

THE PRINCIPLE FOR RELATIONSHIP-FOCUSED APPROACH

For improving communication with a patient, this principle means that right approach is the most effective one.

Observation 1 and 2

All the respondents of this section (n=12) believe that approach to an individual patient needs to be different for each situation. Some thought they'd be different, others that all their patients are different. Many were indifferent about patient's needs and the right approach didn't even cross their minds.

Individual patients & their:

Differentiate patients

Differentiate patients from healthy patients

Differentiate from diagnosis

Most of the respondents (n=10) believe that approach to each patient needs to be different. Some thought they'd be different, others that all their patients are different. Some respondents (n=3) thought they'd be the same.

Observation 3 and 4

All the respondents (n=12) believe that the patient and community roles have been acknowledged in the approach. All the respondents agreed the approach that respects patient's rights, responsibilities and their individuality. Many also thought that acknowledging patient's rights, respecting autonomy and "self identity" is important. Conflicting situations were acknowledged, however, all the respondents of this section agreed that health professionals' responsibilities remain the same regardless of the circumstances.
