- We use the comparative form of adjectives and the word than to compare two people or things.
Example: Craig is taller than Tom.
- To compare two people or things, we can also use the structure: one is adjective + as.
Example: Tom is not as funny as David.
- We use the superlative form of adjectives to either show a person or thing has the highest degree of a certain quality compared to all the other people or things.
Example: Tommy is the funniest of the three James Bond actors.

Adjectives	Comparative	Superlative
one-syllable	more/most	more/most
two-syllable	more/most	the most three-syllable	more/most	the most adjective + er	more	the most adjective + est	the most	the most irregular	more/most	the most

For comparing two people or things, we can also use the following structure:

- One is + adjective + as, without than (than is for people and the superlative form of adjectives is not used).
The point of American tennis player is to compare and then choose the better.
- one is + adjective + as, without than (than is for people and the superlative form of adjectives is not used).
For other, different adjectives when we are comparing are greater adjectives. Comparative adjectives always allow the word with as but not than.
- as + adjective + as, without than (than is for people and the superlative form of adjectives is not used).
For example, Reading and Swimming is as difficult as each other.
- more/less
These adjectives in result require comparative (because of the more/less structure).
