Future research should focus on the development of interventions that are tailored to the specific needs of different subgroups of stroke survivors. For example, interventions for stroke survivors with cognitive impairment should focus on functional activities that are meaningful to the individual, such as hobbies or interests, rather than cognitive tasks. Similarly, interventions for stroke survivors with depression should focus on addressing the underlying causes of depression, such as social isolation, rather than cognitive tasks. Future research should also explore the use of technology, such as mobile devices, to support stroke survivors in their daily lives.
