The Immorality of Limiting Growth Edward Walter, 1981-06-30 The Industrial Age has ended according to no growth futurism because the finitude of the earth has been reached Its proponents maintain that technological innovation cannot save industrial society because of pollution over population and inflation They call for a transformed society in which productivity pollution and population growth are strictly controlled This volume emphatically challenges the no growth viewpoint on both philosophical and empirical grounds In it Edward Walter demonstrates that the interests of those who are socially deprived cannot be fulfilled in a steady state because the privileged classes are able to use their power to prevent redistribution of wealth and to retain their advantages Far from equating technology with pollution and the depletion of natural resources Walter sees it as the means by which resource shortages can be overcome and pollution control can be achieved He describes and recommends an essential liberalism that could provide economic development to all classes in a spirit of international cooperation without necessitating the transformation of human nature and political institutions The Cambridge Companion to the Bible, 1894 401(k) Answer Book, 2009 Research Paper NE, 1987 FDR and Reagan John W. More, 1990 Long term recreation planning requires an understanding of recreation participation patterns This study examined Vermonters participation in 27 leisure activities from three domains outdoor resource based and indoor to see how such participation differed in each domain Indoor activities were the most popular followed by resource based activities and general outdoor activities Overall participation declined with age though this effect was mitigated somewhat for older parents Other socioeconomic and demographic variables had limited effects on participation Northern Forest Lands Herbert E. Echelberger, A. E. Luloff, Frederick E. Schmidt, 1991 S2 Residents of the northern forest lands of New England rely heavily on the natural resources of the region for their economic welfare and outdoor recreation opportunities For many decades the relationship between large landholders and the citizens of this region has remained stable However recent events portend drastic changes in ownership of large tracts of forest land For area residents this change may signal changes in their access to land based economic and recreational opportunities which they have traditionally enjoyed A telephone survey of residents in the five county region of northern Vermont and New Hampshire was conducted to determine resident attitudes and resource use patterns Respondents were asked to 1 Assess problems confronting their communities and region and express their attitudes toward local and regional planning 2 Indicate their frequency of participation in a variety of outdoor recreational activities and their knowledge of ownership of the land they used for recreation and 3 Indicate their support for or opposition to certain options that might be available to ensure the continuation of the large single landownership patterns within northern forest lands Data from the
