

Steve Story #19
Female Soldiers During the Civil War

During the Civil War, thousands of women from both sides tried their best to assist, assuming various identities and responsibilities to fight their might fight for their respective nations. Some of them did it for themselves, but many did it for missionary reasons. The pay for a female soldier was about $13 a month, which was close to double what a regular soldier made in the same position at the time.

Also, being a man gave women a lot more freedom than just being called a woman, which is remarkable. This was still true. They had a variety of ways to earn their suffrage and being a man meant they could manage your monthly $13 wages independently.

It should come as no surprise that many of these women kept up their duties long after the war had ended, some even for the government. These professionals in soldiers' ranks weren't the last to keep serving. One woman, Mary Cheney, dedicated her career after she was wounded in the arm, returned to her Pennsylvania home to help rebuild and peace-keepers. She had served the eighteenth month under the alias, John Burns.

Some females disguised themselves to join the Army for the comradeship their husbands such as George Smith did with the Army after her husband was shot and died fighting in their ranks.

Perhaps most surprisingly, in 1862 the U.S. Army claimed that "any woman who ever enlisted in the military services of the United States as a member of any organization of the Regular or Volunteer Army for any time during the period of the Civil War."
