Organization	The response begins with a topic sentence (in a paragraph) or a thesis statement (in an essay) that identifies the work, its title, author, and genre, and makes an overall response to the work. The body explores the overall response through explaining thoughts and feelings, by giving reasons, and by supporting points with examples from the work. The conclusion leaves the reader with a question, a comment, a fresh insight, or another memorable impression.	The response begins with a topic sentence (in a paragraph) or a thesis statement (in an essay) that identifies the work by title and author and makes a response to the work. The body explores the response through explaining thoughts and feelings. Some reasons are explained and supporting examples given. The conclusion brings the response to a satisfactory close.	The response begins with a topic sentence (in a paragraph) or a thesis statement (in an essay), but the conclusion may not identify the work by title, author, and genre or make an overall response to the work. The body explains the response, but some thoughts, feelings, reasons, and specific examples from the work are missing. The conclusion may be weak or repetitive.	The response does not begin with either a topic sentence (in a paragraph) or a thesis statement (in an essay), and the writer fails to identify the work by title, author, and genre. The overall response is unclear, unclear, or unsupported. No organizational plan is evident.
Elements of Response to Literature	The purpose of explaining thoughts and feelings, and clearly describing the writer's and the reader's understanding of the work, is achieved. The response summarizes the work as needed to clearly state points but does not retell the work. Used ideas to convincingly prove, vivid, or expressive.	The writing offers some degree of new insight into the work. The response summarizes the work to clearly state points but may also unnecessarily retell the work. Used ideas to generally prove.	The writing does little to deepen the reader's or the reader's understanding of the work. The response may also unnecessarily retell the work or fail to summarize when necessary. Used ideas to vaguely prove.	The writing does not deepen the reader's or the reader's understanding of the work. The response unnecessarily retells the work or fails to summarize when necessary. Words are missing or create confusion.
Grammar, Usage, Mechanics, and Spelling	There are few or no errors in mechanics, usage, grammar, or spelling. Titles of works are correctly punctuated throughout.	There are some errors in mechanics, usage, grammar, or spelling. Titles of works are correctly punctuated.	Several errors in mechanics, usage, grammar, or spelling make it difficult to understand parts of the response. Titles of works are not correctly punctuated.	Many errors and serious errors in mechanics, usage, grammar, or spelling make it difficult to understand the response. Titles of works are not correctly punctuated.
