Charles Darwin, at the age of 8, watched as a lion pounce on its prey whilst in the zoo.

Throughout his travels, he documented the distribution and movement of organisms, including birds and plants.

In 1859, Darwin published his groundbreaking work, 'On the Origin of Species', offering profound insights into the diversity of life and Darwin's theories are underpinning of the natural world.

The world is still changing, which can trigger the ability of some species to survive based on their characteristics and abilities.

Changes could include climate, new predators introduced to a habitat, and human activity.
