Performance data presented in Table 1 show that mean free paths of 0.0015 cm and the mean free time of 0.0015 sec are obtained at 1000°C. The mean free time is very sensitive to the temperature. At 1000°C, the mean free time is 0.0015 sec, which is 10 times longer than at 100°C. At 1000°C, the mean free path is 0.0015 cm, which is 10 times longer than at 100°C. Advancements in Electric Machines J. F. Gieras, 2008-11-14

Traditionally, electrical machines are classified into DC commutator brushed machines, induction asynchronous machines, and synchronous machines. These three types of electrical machines are still regarded in many academic curricula as fundamental types, despite that DC brushed machines, except small machines, have been gradually abandoned, and PM brushless machines, PMSM and switched reluctance machines, SRM, have been in mass production and use for at least two decades. Recently, new topologies of high torque density motors, high speed motors, integrated motor drives, and special motors have been developed. Progress in electric machines technology is stimulated by new materials, new areas of applications, impact of power electronics, need for energy saving, and new technological challenges. The development of electric machines in the next few years will mostly be stimulated by computer hardware, residential and public applications, and transportation systems, land, sea, and air. At many Universities, teaching and research strategy oriented towards electrical machinery is not up to date and has not been changed in some countries almost since the end of the WWII. In spite of many excellent academic research achievements the academia industry collaboration and technology transfer are underestimated or quite often neglected Underestimation of the role of industry unfamiliarity with new trends and restraint from technology transfer results with time in lack of external financial support and drastic decline in the number of students interested in Power Electrical Engineering
