"Now" seemed like a vague moment. It was the moment when the nation was at a crossroads, when the country was being torn apart by opposing views on abortion. After this momentous decision, nothing had yet been done to protect and defend it. At another crucial moment, the nation seemed to have many choices and presented a whole host of options. But this moment was a point of no return, and the nation had made its choice: pro-life supporters were the ones who would be allowed to continue their religious beliefs. From that point on, the country's future would be determined by the decisions of the Supreme Court and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The moment had come.
