Regulation No. 180-200-A-200 (11/2000), revised

Student Edition

Teacher Edition

Student pages feature small box areas for your written or handwritten notes. These boxes are the first pages of this Student Edition. Additional boxes for notes are located throughout the text, following the problem sets and above most multiple-choice and short-answer items. These boxes are highlighted in green boxes on these pages.

These annotations have three possible goals or levels of use by students. These goals correspond to three levels of annotation: (1) the most common is to take notes in reading the text, problem sets, and the chapter test sections; (2) the next level is to use the annotations in Problem Sets, multiple-choice, and short-answer sections to practice the problem-solving strategies and problem-solving techniques that you have learned in this course; (3) the third level is to use the annotations to help you prepare for the Regents examination.

These annotations may also assist the teacher in assessing the student's understanding of the material. This allows the teacher to provide the student with feedback on how to use the annotations.

These annotations are not intended for use by students who are not currently using the text. These annotations are also not intended for students who are using the text for the first time. These annotations are intended for students who are using the text for the second time or for students who are using the text for the third time.
