CODOMINANCE - BLOOD TYPES

In humans, three different alleles can create four different phenotypes. The alleles are A, B, and O, with the phenotypes being A, B, AB, and O. The alleles correspond to the carbohydrates found on the surface of a red blood cell. Since one blood type allele is inherited from each parent, there are several possible combinations that can be inherited.

Phenotype	Genotype
A	AA or AO
B	BB or BO
AB	AB
O	OO

Both A and B alleles are dominant, meaning that they both express their phenotypes. Because they are dominant, if one allele and one B allele are inherited, then the blood type and phenotype would be AB. This is an example of codominance, or when both alleles are expressed in the phenotype. However, the O allele is recessive, meaning that it does not express its phenotype. When there are two O alleles, there is no blood type, so the individual would be O. This is incomplete dominance, but it does not affect the other alleles, so they still express their phenotypes.

1. Crosses involving blood types are often used to determine if an individual is a carrier for a trait. If one parent has type AB and the other has type O, what is the probability that the offspring will be type O?

AB	AB	AB	AB
AB	AB	AB	AB
AB	AB	AB	AB
AB	AB	AB	AB

2. Crosses involving blood types are often used to determine if an individual is a carrier for a trait. If one parent has type AB and the other has type O, what is the probability that the offspring will be type O?

3. Crosses involving blood types are often used to determine if an individual is a carrier for a trait. If one parent has type AB and the other has type O, what is the probability that the offspring will be type O?

INCOMPLETE DOMINANCE

In most incomplete dominance, one allele is more dominant than the other. However, there are cases where one allele is less dominant than another. In this case, the dominant allele is called dominant, and the recessive allele is called recessive. In incomplete dominance, the heterozygous phenotype has traits from both parents, but the homozygous recessive trait has traits from only one parent. This is because the dominant allele is expressing its phenotype, rather than one fully determining the phenotype.

1. Cross a pure Bantam with a white Bantam. What is the probability that the offspring will be heterozygous?

2. Cross a pure Bantam with a white Bantam. What is the probability that the offspring will be heterozygous?

3. Cross a pure Bantam with a white Bantam. What is the probability that the offspring will be heterozygous?

CODOMINANCE - NON-MENDELIAN GENETICS

In incomplete dominance, if the genotype is heterozygous, it expresses traits from both parents, but traits in homozygous are not expressed. Both alleles are expressed equally in incomplete dominance. Heterozygous individuals will express both traits at the same time.

1. All solid feathers in chickens, the allele for light feathers (L) is codominant with the allele for white feathers (W). Heterozygous chickens will have an intermediate phenotype that appears as speckled feathers and white feathers (SW). Answer the questions and "Punnett" requires. Express probabilities as percentages.

2. All solid feathers in chickens are crossed. What is the probability the following?

- White offspring
- Black offspring
- Intermediate offspring

White	White	White	White
