Two Dimensions of Time Stephen Gorard, Gareth Rees, Ralph Fevre, 1998

This study is part of a regional study in industrial South Wales on the determinants of participation and non participation in post compulsory education and training with special reference to processes of change in the patterns of these determinants over time and to variations between geographical areas The study combines contextual analysis of secondary data about education and training providers with a regional study of several generations of families in South Wales a door to door survey of 1 104 representative householders semi structured interviews and taped oral histories conducted in 1996 97 This study reports evidence emphasizing the importance of social background as a determinant of patterns of participation in adult education and training By investigating the potential predictors of these patterns the study finds that school based qualifications are not particularly significant but are themselves predictable from an individual s background characteristics Lifelong patterns of participation are highly predictable although the theoretical model used here to explain them also involves individual rationality The situation is changing however Over the 50 years covered by the survey data while initial education has lengthened later participation in formal learning has decreased in frequency duration and the proportion funded by employers Thus while extended initial education is now far less determined by socioeconomic characteristics including gender later education and training is slightly more determined by socioeconomic characteristics especially gender learners The third section privileges the view at the close level of research inside local communities in the field International researchers and practitioners particularly young researchers who are active in adult learning and in local global communities will be interested in this book The emphasis of the chapters is on participatory and emancipatory social research Empowerment of women in rural communities involvement of communities in social and environmental movements power sharing in community research projects and the exposure of hegemonic globalising forces at work in ethnic communities are among the themes developed in this volume
