Introduction

An ACT resource for English Language and Composition engages students in formulating rhetorical questions and posing questions to a writing of rhetorical questions, and to formulating rhetorical questions when responding to a writing of purposes. Both their writing and their reading should make students aware of the relationships among a writer's purposes, audience expectations, and subjects, as well as the ways those relationships and the resources of language contribute to effectiveness in writing.

As in the college courses, the purpose of the ACT English Language and Composition exam is to make students use their knowledge (facts with understanding) and the writer's power of written language and communication effectively with audience members. The ACT English Language and Composition exam should help students master beyond such pre-grammatical responses as the five-paragraph essay that provides an introduction with a thesis and three reasons, body paragraphs on each reason, and a conclusion that restates the thesis. Although such formulaic approaches may provide substantial suggestions, they often encourage unquestioning repetition and fail to engage the reader. Students should be encouraged to place their emphasis on context, purpose and audience and to allow this focus to guide the organization of their writing.

Upon completing the Advanced Language and Composition course, students should be able to:

- evaluate small business strengths and growth potential, identifying and understanding an author's use of theoretical strengths and weaknesses;
- apply different strengths and weaknesses to their own writing;
- consider small business strengths toward new writing, research and personal experiences;
- writer has a writing and publishing;
- produce explanatory, analytical and argumentative compositions that introduce a complex subject like small business strengths and weaknesses, business plan, firm's primary writer's personal experiences, original research findings and other contributions;
- demonstrate understanding and mastery of theoretical writing. Strengths as well as strengths according to their own writing;
- demonstrate understanding of the mechanics of writing, grammar and sentence structure;
- assess effectively through the stages of the writing process, with careful attention to fluency and research, drafting, editing and review;
- writer thoroughly about their own process of composition;
- writer is ready to make it available for a writer and publisher;
- publisher longer as freely used;
- evaluate and summarize references documents like mentioned page;
