1. Describe the formation course relation branches of distribution & effects of injury of median nerve?

ANSWER- The formation, course, and relation branches of the median nerve, as well as the effects of injury, can be described as follows:

Formation and Course:

The median nerve is one of the major nerves in the upper limb and arises from the brachial plexus, a network of nerves originating from the cervical spinal nerves. The fibers that contribute to the median nerve arise from the lateral and medial cords of the brachial plexus, primarily from the C6 to T1 spinal nerve roots.

After its formation, the median nerve courses down the arm, passing through the axilla (armpit) and then running along the anterior surface of the upper arm. It continues into the forearm, passing through the cubital fossa (the anterior elbow pit) and running between the two heads of the pronator teres muscle. In the forearm, it gives off several branches and eventually enters the hand.

Branches and Relations:

1. Muscular branches: The median nerve provides muscular branches to various muscles in the forearm. These include branches to the pronator teres, flexor carpi radialis, palmaris longus, flexor digitorum superficialis, and flexor pollicis longus muscles.

2. Anterior interosseous nerve: A significant branch of the median nerve is the anterior interosseous nerve, which arises in the forearm. It innervates the flexor digitorum profundus, the flexor pollicis longus, and the pronator quadratus muscles.
