

Surface Weather Map Showing Storm System in the Eastern United States

Where are cold fronts moving across the central states and southern states? Higher pressure is moving to the north (cold air) while lower pressure air is moving south (warmer air). As cold air moves across the land, it is forced to rise, creating a low pressure area. As air rises, it cools, creating a high pressure area. This is called subsidence. Subsidence is the sinking of air that is heated by the land or ocean surface. Subsidence is often associated with high pressure systems.

Based on wind directions and the isobars, predict the type of air masses (fronts or cells) that would form across all weather stations.
