Factual, Comparative, and Inferential Determinations Within Comparative Content Cameron Spears,2011 By augmenting an existing static medium a graphic organizer with attributes such that learners were able to sort or rearrange information in multiple ways two new types of dynamic graphic organizers were created An experiment was performed to investigate the effectiveness of these dynamic graphic organizers as instructional tools One hundred sixty one students were recruited for participation in the study from a two year community college and a four year public university in the southeast United States Participants were randomly assigned to one of three graphic organizer treatment groups static sortable and shuffle sortable Response accuracy and response latency measurements for three types of mental tasks factual comparative and inferential were compared across the three treatment groups A multivariate analysis of variance showed no significant difference between the three graphic organizer types for response accuracy A within groups analysis of variance showed no significant differences in response accuracy between mental tasks within the static or sortable treatment groups However analysis of variance indicated that accuracy for inferential judgments was lower than that for factual judgments in the shuffle sortable group. With respect to response latency a multivariate analysis of variance revealed no significant difference between the three treatment groups. A within groups analysis of variance showed significant differences in response latency between factual and inferential judgment making for both the sortable and shuffle sortable treatments. The sortable treatment had the most pronounced differences in latency between mental tasks whereas no significant differences in response latency were observed within the static treatment.

Teaching Children to Read Douglas Ray Reutzel, Robert B. Cooter, 2004 For Elementary Reading Methods courses. This comprehensive and balanced look at literacy practice has long been one of the most popular reading methods texts available. The text begins by introducing seven principles for comprehensive reading instruction and then explains the theoretical foundations of teaching reading. Part I builds on those foundations with specific methods in Part II and then in Part III it describes how to create a variety of learning centers and how to plan developmentally appropriate reading curriculum for students in both K-3 and 4-8 classrooms. Chapters 12 and 13 provide a continuum of knowledge by describing classroom organization and curriculum for grades 4-6 and 6-8.
