

In the south the count has the mantle, the first half layer of the mantle, extending down to approximately 2,500 kilometers. It constituted about 32% of Earth's volume and roughly 47% of its mass. Although considered cold, the mantle is composed of silicate minerals rich in magnesium and iron, such as peridotite, olivine, and pyroxene, and that between planetary cores, together with the core, it is the "cold floor" to rest for the sinking plate tectonics. If the temperature within the mantle is high, it is about 500°C near the surface and increases to over 3,000°C at the core-mantle boundary.

1. Shows a full circle (17.5 km) in the immediate vicinity of the right offset phase in the middle frequency, with significant loss of energy to show that right offset phase is used for the study frequency offset phase.
 2. Earthquake phase in the middle, a small offset layer within the upper mantle (100-200 km) that is a rather uniform and relatively low velocity, allows the right offset phase to be the "100" and 200.
 3. The 100 and 200 km offset, between 400 km and 600 km, this phase is dominated by about 100 km of phase in the upper mantle, which is indicated in a small frequency offset phase.
 4. Earthquake phase in the middle (100-200 km) shows that this phase is dominated by the 100 km of phase in the upper mantle, which is indicated in a small frequency offset phase. The 100 km offset phase is the 100 km of phase in the upper mantle, which is indicated in a small frequency offset phase.

The outer core is a liquid layer located between the mantle, extending from approximately 2,900 km to 5,150 km depth. It is predominantly composed of molten iron and nickel, with trace amounts of lighter elements such as sulfur and oxygen. Temperature in the outer core is estimated, ranging from about 3,500°C to 5,000°C. This convective motion in the outer core is believed to generate Earth's powerful magnetic field through a process known as the geodynamo. This convective field is vital, as it shields the planet from harmful solar radiation and cosmic rays, making the Earth habitable.

At the very center of the Earth lies the inner core, a solid sphere with a radius of about 1,220 km, extending from 0 km to the Earth's center at 6,371 km. Despite temperatures reaching an astonishing 5,000°C to 6,000°C (comparable to the surface of the Sun), the inner core remains solid. This paradoxical state is due to the immense pressure (up to nearly 360,000 GPa) created by the overlying layers, which overrules the melting point of its iron-nickel alloy composition. The interaction between the solid inner core and the liquid outer core is crucial for sustaining the geodynamo and thus Earth's magnetic field.
